About the National Multiple Sclerosis Society

The National MS Society’s mission is for people affected by MS to live their best lives as we stop MS in its tracks, restore what has been lost and end MS forever.

To fulfill this mission, the Society funds cutting-edge research, drives change through advocacy, facilitates professional education, collaborates with MS organizations around the world, and provides services designed to help people with MS and their families move their lives forward. Last year alone, through our comprehensive nationwide network, the Society devoted more than $100 million to help a million individuals connect to the people, information and resources they need. To move closer to a world free of MS, the Society also invested $42 million to support more than 380 new and ongoing research projects around the world.

Whether you are a person living with MS, a family member or concerned about someone else living with MS, the National MS Society is your partner in helping you find personalized responses to your unique needs, up-to-date information, referrals and other practical resources. MS Navigators are highly skilled, compassionate professionals who connect you to the information, resources and support needed to move your life forward. These supportive partners help navigate the challenges of MS unique to your situation.

Early and ongoing treatment with an FDA-approved therapy can make a difference for people with multiple sclerosis. Learn about your options by talking to your health care professional and contacting the National MS Society.

Exploring Housing Options

Beginning a new housing search can seem overwhelming, but there are many resources and organizations available to support and assist you through the process. The most critical first step is gathering information about your options, so you can plan. You will want ideas and suggestions from those who are familiar with the various housing options.

Both Federal and State governments have set standards for compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act. Be familiar with these standards as you begin to explore the housing situation that will best meet your needs.

You will also want to choose the best method for you to organize all of the paperwork that will be involved.

Pointers as you begin your search

- Begin your housing search early to avoid a potential crisis situation.
- The National MS Society is an excellent place to begin gathering information.
- You may want to solicit help from a family member, social worker or local housing advocate.
- State or local housing agencies, councils on aging, disability agencies, your local Public Housing Authority, and/or Independent Living Centers are all good potential sources of information.
- Keep good records of contacts and copies of your paperwork.
- Do not hesitate to ask questions.
- If you are on a housing waiting list, feel free to check in periodically to find out where you are on the list, and be patient.
- Contact assisted living facilities or retirement communities directly to learn more about these options.

Home Ownership

Assessing your needs

Affordability and accessibility mean different things to different people. For people with MS, these issues tend to become more of a concern if there is an anticipated decrease in income or if increasing disability is presenting barriers to independence and quality of life. Whether you are planning to remain in your home indefinitely or planning to move to different housing at some point in the future, the following list of questions can help you assess your needs and determine how to support and pursue your housing choices.

- Do I still need all the space in my residence or is it time to downsize?
- Do I anticipate living alone or having family members reside with me in the future?
- Do I live a far distance from family, friends and my health care team? Will that affect a future housing choice?
- Will my home require significant repair work or improvements in the near future? If so, how will I pay for these upgrades?
- Is financing my residence of concern in the long-term?
- Is my residence on or near an accessible transportation route?
- How many barriers exist to get from outside to inside my home?
- Could an outside ramp be installed if necessary?
- Are the doorways wide enough for a walker and/or wheelchair?
- If my house is two floors, could I live on one level?
- Could my bathroom, kitchen and laundry be made accessible?
- Do I feel safe in my home? Can I easily evacuate if there is an emergency?
- Do I have an extra room if family or a personal attendant ever needs to stay with me?
- Is there parking available that could accommodate an adapted van?
Financial resources and strategies for the homeowner

Home equity line of credit

Equity is the value of your home minus the money you still owe on it. A home equity line of credit, sometimes referred to as HELOC, is a form of revolving credit in which your home serves as collateral. Most homeowners use these credit lines only for major items such as education, home improvements or medical bills, not for day-to-day expenses. These loans typically have variable rather than fixed interest rates and involve closing costs and fees. There is typically a fixed period of time, such as 10 years, during which you can borrow money.

Caution: Before taking out a home equity line of credit, consider how you will pay back the money you borrow. Whatever your payment agreement is, you may have to pay the entire balance owed all at once when the plan ends. If you are unable to make this “balloon payment,” you could lose your home.

Second mortgage

A second mortgage also uses your home as collateral and provides you with a fixed amount of money, repayable over a fixed number of years. In most cases, the payment schedule calls for equal payments that will pay off the entire loan by the end of the loan period. Second mortgages are often used by homeowners needing a significant amount of money for a specific one-time expense such as building a home addition or doing significant home modifications.

Caution: Second mortgages involve borrowing against your home. Failing to make loan payments could put your ownership in jeopardy.

Home equity conversion mortgages or reverse mortgages

A home equity conversion mortgage, more commonly referred to as a reverse mortgage, is a type of loan that allows homeowners over 62 years of age to receive cash for their home’s equity without having to sell the home or take on the additional monthly payment of a second mortgage. Loan repayment is not required until the last surviving borrower dies, sells the home or no longer lives in the home as their primary residence.

Reverse mortgages are for homeowners with low cash flow and significant equity in their home, by providing the option of borrowing against the home equity so they can have the funds they need to meet everyday expenses and pay for additional support services such as personal assistance or home care services. These mortgages tend to be more costly than traditional loans because they are rising-debt loans. Each month, interest is applied to the principal loan balance. Because the consumer is not paying down the loan, the total amount of interest owed increases significantly over time as the loan interest compounds.
With a reverse mortgage, you retain the title to your home and continue to maintain the home, pay property taxes and homeowners insurance. The amount that can be borrowed depends on the age of your home, equity and value of the home, as well as the interest rate. Interest on reverse mortgages isn’t deductible on income tax returns until the loan is paid off in part or whole. You should consult with a financial, tax or legal advisor about your individual circumstances before taking out a reverse mortgage. In order to qualify for this type of loan, borrowers must live in the home and have paid off, or nearly paid off, their home mortgage.

Caution: Because of this rising-debt and shrinking equity scenario, a reverse mortgage could use up all or a significant portion of the equity in a home. It is important to learn as much as you can about a reverse mortgage before signing an agreement. Homeowner counseling is required to apply for an FHA insured reverse mortgage and is a good idea for those considering other products as well. HUD approved counseling is recommended for those considering Home Equity Conversion Mortgages or Reverse Mortgages.

WARNING: When using non-HUD approved reverse mortgage counseling, some entities claim to provide debt and home ownership counseling, but instead engage in predatory lending.

Avoiding foreclosure

Foreclosure devastates families and neighborhoods. If you start missing mortgage payments, or anticipate you might begin missing payments soon, it is important to talk with your lender as soon as possible. Mortgage companies lose money with foreclosures, so it is in their best interest for you to keep your home. The further a homeowner falls behind on payments, the more likely the lender will escalate their response to the situation. Initially, you will be contacted by letter or phone but, with time, a “Demand Letter” will arrive and your case could eventually be turned over to the lender’s attorneys, at which point you will be responsible for all attorneys’ fees.

Housing counseling agencies
Foreclosure prevention counseling is provided free of charge by nonprofit housing counseling agencies working in partnership with the federal government. These agencies are funded, in part, by HUD and NeighborWorks® America. You do not need to pay a private company to receive these services. HUD approved housing counseling agencies can provide you with information and assistance that can help you to avoid foreclosure.

Caution: It is strongly recommended that you work only with HUD approved housing counseling agencies.

Home Affordable Refinance Program (HARP)
If you are current on your mortgage payments but have been unable to get traditional refinancing because the value of your home has declined, you may be eligible to refinance through HARP. It is designed to help you get a new, more affordable and stable mortgage. These loans require a loan application and underwriting process, and refinance fees will apply. 202-649-3811

Home Affordable Modification Program (HAMP)
Another program designed to assist homeowners at risk of foreclosure is the Affordable Modification Program (HAMP). This program provides incentives to loan servicers to modify mortgages for homeowners who are in, or close to, default. To qualify for HAMP you must:

▪ Own your own home.
▪ Have a mortgage that is owned or guaranteed by Fannie Mac or Freddie Mac.
▪ Have no late mortgage payments (more than 30 days late) in the last 12 months.
▪ Owe no more than 125% of the value of your home (on the first mortgage; combined loan-to-value ratio can be higher; only the first mortgage is financed).

Avoiding mortgage foreclosure scams

Some companies claim they can assist homeowners facing foreclosure with options that will allow them to keep their property, refinance or modify an existing mortgage, repair credit, or delay foreclosure. These options may be intended to convince you to take the wrong steps so that they can take your money and possibly take your home. Scam operators are clever with their approach and will try to convince you they can help you.

The warning signs that you may be dealing with a scam mortgage foreclosure or loan modification operator includes someone who:

- Makes unsolicited offers or lofty advertisements, claiming they can help save your home.
- Demands a fee in advance. No legitimate organization that works with borrowers to avoid foreclosure will ever ask for money up front.
- Offers to negotiate a loan modification for a fee.
- Recommends you break off contact with the lender and any counselor with whom you may have been working.
- Advises you to stop making mortgage payments.
- Tells you to send your mortgage payment to anyone other than your loan servicer.
- Instructs you to transfer ownership of your property.
- Makes verbal promises that aren’t put in writing.
- Asks you to sign a document that has blank lines or spaces.

WARNING: The National MS Society strongly recommends that HUD approved counseling agencies are used when facing foreclosure. There are companies seeking to take advantage of vulnerable homeowners who have fallen behind on their mortgage payments and possibly be at risk of foreclosure. Be wary of companies who refer to themselves as a “foreclosure consultant” or “mortgage consultant,” “foreclosure service,” “foreclosure rescue agency” or “loan modification company.”

Buying a Home

Buying a house or condominium is both an exciting and stressful venture. Take the time to do a careful and detailed review of all the budgetary and cost implications of home ownership prior to engaging in an active search. If you have never owned a home, housing counseling agencies can be useful in helping prospective buyers decide if home ownership is best for them.

To become a homeowner, you must have sufficient income and adequate cash for a down-payment to qualify for a mortgage, and a credit history that is acceptable to the lender. It is helpful to obtain a mortgage pre-qualification prior to actively looking for a home. Don’t hesitate to make an offer that is less than the asking price for a home.

Once you have decided that a specific house is the one you want, be sure there is an appropriate inspection before you finalize the transaction.

Caution: Sometimes people who are receiving public entitlements or benefits are concerned that owning a home may affect these benefits. However, the value of a home is almost never considered when assessing eligibility for benefits.

Using a realtor

One way to locate a realtor is through a friend or family member who has experience with that realtor. Another method is to visit a neighborhood where you hope to live and look at the realtors that are listed on ‘For Sale’ signs. Some real estate offices have realtors who specialize in finding homes for persons with disabilities. It’s wise to look for realtors who use the registered collective membership mark of REALTOR®. This designation means they are members of the National Association of REALTORS® and must follow that organization’s strict code of ethics and standards of practice. Not all licensed real estate agents are professional REALTORS®.

Finding accessible homes

Home Access Program

The Home Access Program is an initiative started by Handi-Ramp, a company that has been manufacturing handicap accessible ramps since 1958. Helping individuals and families find realtors who can assist in the search for a handicap accessible home or consultants who can modify a current home is the premise of the program. By compiling a searchable database of realtors and consultants across the country willing and able to aid in this search, the Home Access Program, along with Handi-Ramp, seeks to address accessibility issues.

Barrier Free Homes

Barrier Free Home is a one-stop-shop for barrier-free homes and apartments. With extensive data on each home/apartment, photographs and feature lists, finding a wheelchair-accessible home becomes much easier. Barrier Free Home can help both buyers and sellers of barrier-free homes.

Finding a home that is universally designed for wheelchair accessibility can be difficult. Since there is no overarching law that requires the construction of barrier free homes, growth in this segment is sporadic and driven by the individual home buyer's needs. Thus, there is no guarantee that a home labeled as wheelchair accessible meets the requirements of the ADA (or VA requirements). Because of this, it is difficult to know if a home will be suitable without visiting it. Barrier Free Home is a site devoted to the wheelchair accessible, Universal Design, ADA or barrier free home and apartment market.

Financing options

Federal Housing Administration (FHA) insurance

In this program, the mortgage loan is funded by a lending institution such as a mortgage company or bank, but the mortgage is insured by the FHA. Because FHA insures your mortgage, lenders are more willing to give loans with lower qualifying requirements so it's easier for you to qualify. Even if you have had credit problems, such as bankruptcy, it is easier for you to qualify for an FHA loan than a conventional loan. The down payment can be as low as 3% and can come from a family member, employer or charitable organization. Other loans don't allow this.

FHA loans have competitive interest rates because the loans are insured by the Federal Government. Always compare an FHA loan with other loan types however. The seller must agree to let you use FHA Insurance for the purchase.

203(K) loans

HUD approved lenders can provide a 203(K) Loan that allows a home buyer to package the mortgage for the house with a loan for its rehabilitation. Typically, purchasing a home needing repairs or upgrades is a multi-step process. Homebuyers must obtain funds to purchase a home and then secure additional funds to pay for the upgrade with a short-term loan that can come with a high interest rate. The 203(k) loan allows the borrower to take out just one mortgage to cover both the purchase of the property and the cost of upgrades.

Veterans Affairs loans

These loans are made by a lender, such as a mortgage company, savings and loan, or bank. VA’s guaranty on the loan protects the lender against loss if the payments are not made and is intended to encourage lenders to offer veterans loans with more favorable terms. No down payment is required in most cases and the loan maximum may be up to 100 percent of the VA-established reasonable value of the property.

Home Modifications

Home modifications maximize independence, increase safety, enhance comfort and reduce the chance of injury. They also increase “visitability”. Visitability is an increasingly used term that refers to single-family homes having a bare minimum level of accessibility, so a wheelchair user can comfortably visit and move around the home.

Accessibility barriers in the home are most commonly found in the entrance area, bathroom and kitchen. Some other areas where access may be a barrier in the home include bedrooms, dining areas, family rooms, laundry facilities, garage or carport access and / or any area of the home that would impede daily living activities. Home modification can involve major changes to the home or simple modifications. Below is a list of suggestions and resources to help evaluate the possibilities for easier access in a home.

Common home modifications

Some typical examples of common home modifications may include the following changes to your home.

Entrances

- Accessible home entrances (ramps, step-free entry).
- Covered entryways.
- Widening doorways and hallways.

Bathroom

- Adding a low or no-threshold shower.
- Installing a raised toilet.
- Reinforcing bathroom walls and adding grab bars.
- Lever handle faucets.

Kitchen

- Lowering cabinets.
- Modifying countertop heights and creating open space underneath.
- Installing front control ranges and side-by-side refrigerator.
- Raising dishwashers and front-loading washers and dryers.
General

- Low-pile carpeting.
- Lowered light switches or thermostats.
- Rocker-style light switches.
- Raised electrical outlets.

Aesthetically pleasing home modifications

The National MS Society’s website includes information about changes to a home to meet the needs of everyone living in the home. Whether it is simply the way things are arranged in the home or modifications, a home can become more comfortable, accessible and be aesthetically pleasing. The National MS Society has a brochure, At Home with MS – Adapting Your Environment, to give suggestions and considerations for making changes: nationalmssociety.org/NationalMSSociety/media/MSNationalFiles/Brochures/Brochure-At-Home-with-MS%E2%80%94Adapting-Your-Environment.pdf

Financial resources for home modifications

There are many resources in both government and the private sector to explore if you are looking for financing to do home modifications. Some programs may have specific income eligibility, so be sure to get specific, detailed information on any program you are considering.

Property Improvement Loan Insurance (Title I)

HUD provides Title 1 Loans on single-family homes for alterations, repairs and for site improvements. Loans on multifamily structures may be used only for building alteration and repairs. A property owner may apply at any bank, mortgage company, savings and loan association or credit union that is approved to make Title 1 Loans.

HUD does not lend money for property improvements but does insure private Title 1 lenders against loss on property improvement loans they make. To qualify for a Title 1 Loan, the applicant must have the ability to repay the loan in regular monthly payments. Both large and small improvements can be financed with this type of loan.

Caution: Beware of deceptive home improvement contractors. For tips, see pages on working with contractors in this guide. Be sure to use only HUD approved lenders.

Veterans Administration (VA)

The Department of Veteran Affairs (VA) has many programs that provide grants to veterans with disabilities who need to make modifications to their home. Through the VA’s Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (VocRehab) program, an independent living plan will be specially designed to help each veteran or service member live independently at home and in the community. Among other things, the plans provide information and assistance with home modification programs and counseling on how best to use the grants, including guidance on selecting a lot, obtaining the services of an architect, obtaining bids for construction, and arranging financing. Medicaid home and community based waivers

Within broad Federal guidelines, States can develop home and community-based services waivers (HCBS Waivers) to meet the needs of people who prefer to get long-term care services and supports in their home or community, rather than in an institutional setting. Nearly all states and DC offer services through HCBS Waivers. In many states, these HCBS funds can be used to pay for access modifications.

Note: There are some private companies who provide tools, information and creative ideas which help families and caregivers discover the means to care for the elderly or disabled. They may charge a fee for their services.

Services include advising and informing individuals of their rights in direct connection with programs. CAP does not provide financial, housing or medical benefits directly to individuals with disabilities.

CAP is funded by the US Government. It provides assistance and information as well as advocacy to people with disabilities who are getting or applying for services under the Rehabilitation Act. Programs included are Vocational Rehabilitation, Independent Living Services and Projects with private firms. Every U.S. state and territory has its own program.

US Department of Agriculture (USDA)

Rural Housing Repair & Rehabilitation Loans are offered by the US Department of Agriculture (USDA) and are available to very low-income rural residents who own and occupy a dwelling in need of repair. Funds are available for repairs to improve or modernize a home, or to remove health and safety hazards. This is a 1% loan that may be repaid over a 20-year period.

To obtain a loan, homeowner-occupants must be unable to obtain affordable credit elsewhere and must have very low incomes, defined as below 50 percent of the area median income. Grants are only available to homeowners who are 62 years old or older. For a brochure go to: ruralhome.org/storage/documents/rd504_vli_repair.pdf

Rural Housing Repair & Rehabilitation Grants

USDA Rural Housing Repair and Rehabilitation Grants are funded directly by the government. A grant is available to dwelling owner/occupants 62 years of age or older. Funds may only be used for repairs or improvements to remove health and safety hazards, or to complete repairs to make the dwelling accessible for household members with disabilities. The amount of the grant is based on the applicant's ability to repay and must be used in conjunction with the Repair and Rehabilitation Loan. The lifetime maximum grant amount is $7,500. IRS Tax Credits

The entire cost of renovations and home improvements, if made for bona fide medical purposes, can be claimed as IRS tax deductions as long as they do not increase the property value of your home based on a real-estate appraisal. Some of the most common home improvements that can be deducted as medical expenses include, but are not limited to: entrance or exit ramps, handrails or grab bars, railings, support bars or other modifications to bathrooms; lowered or modified kitchen cabinets and equipment; moved or modified electrical outlets and fixtures; porch lifts and other lifts; elevators; and widened doorways at entrances or exits.

A prescription from a physician is needed to document that these renovations are based on medical need. If you are interested in the tax credits that may be available to you, speak to a tax advisor to discuss your specific circumstances and situation. See Section on Capital Expenses, page 6: irs.gov/pub/irs-pdf/p502.pdf

Caution: Consultation with a tax professional is strongly advised when claiming these deductions.

Renovating your home

Tax credits, grants and other sources of financial assistance are often available to help make your home more accessible. momentummagazineonline.com/renovating-your-home/

Private lending resources

Lending institutions provide products to help you access dollars to make necessary home modifications. Whether through a traditional loan or pursuing a home equity line of credit or a second mortgage, your banker will help you to determine whether one of these financing options would be appropriate for you.
Working with contractors

Modifying or adapting your home to meet your needs will most likely require working with an experienced contractor who specializes in accessibility design and remodeling.

Determine your home modification needs

Consider working with an occupational therapist to determine the changes that are best for your current and future accessibility and safety needs. Your current needs may require one set of modifications, but it is important to think of any future needs to avoid multiple modification projects. Some accessibility home builders have specialists on staff. Please contact the National MS Society if you need to locate an occupational therapist.

Clearly describe the work you want done in a specification sheet and floor plan for potential contractors

When all contractors who bid on a project work from the same design description, there is more likely to be a complete and accurate bidding process.

Obtain recommendations

Obtain recommendations from consumers who have had similar work done on their homes or from professional trade associations.

Interview at least three contractors

Interview at least three contractors and request a written, detailed estimate.

- Find out how long they have been in business and their project specialty.
- When bids are received, ask them to explain their price differences.
- Don’t automatically choose the lowest bidder.

Note: Construction can be messy, dusty and time consuming. Ask your contractor how long the project will take, what obstacles you may encounter and how you can best prepare.

Hire only registered and licensed contractors

Except for plumbers and electricians, tradesmen paid by the hour usually don’t need a license. Contractors bidding on any significant work (more than a few hundred dollars) need a license in most states. If you have a problem with a licensed contractor or tradesman, the state licensing board can be a powerful ally in resolving issues. This would not be true if working with unlicensed contractors.
Make sure the contractor has adequate personal liability, property damage and worker’s compensation insurance

All construction contractors need liability and workers’ compensation coverage. Request a copy of the certificates of insurance from the contractor you select naming you as both “certificate holder” and “additional insured” and verify they are current. Otherwise, you may be liable for any injuries and damages that occur during the project. Insurance carriers usually provide certificates showing policy limits and coverage dates at no charge.

Request three references for each contractor

Ask the contractor for a written list of his/her three most recent projects with names, telephone numbers and addresses of the owners. Contact the other homeowners who have hired the contractor and find out if:

- The homeowner had any problems.
- The contractor kept them updated on the project.
- The contractor was on time.
- The homeowner would use the contractor again.

Check the contractor’s complaint history

Check the contractor’s complaint history with your state Attorney General’s Office and the Better Business Bureau.

Do not pay unreasonable up-front payments

Set up a payment schedule that corresponds with specific stages of the job. Assure that the amount agreed for the final payment under the schedule allows “sufficient incentive” for the contractor to finish the project properly and in a timely manner.

Keep records before and after the job is done

- Keep all paper work, including copies of insurance papers.
- Keep a log of phone calls and conversations with the contractor.
- Keeps a journal of activities including your payments.

Renting in the Private Market

Renting in the private market means that a landlord sets a monthly rental rate for a specific unit and then leases it to someone who is able to pay that rent.

Under federal law, disabled tenants and prospective tenants with a disability have the right to apply for and live in a rental unit regardless of their impairment. When a landlord rejects disabled tenants based on the use of a discriminatory housing practice, they have violated the law. The federal Fair Housing Act (FHA) regulates questions that a landlord may or may not ask.

A landlord may not ask a tenant or a prospective tenant who has not asked for accommodation:

- If the applicant or a person intending to live in the rental has a disability
- Questions about the severity of the impairment.
- To see medical records.
- Must treat disabled applicants and tenants in the same way as those without a disability.
- Guiding a tenant to choose a specific rental unit instead of another is inappropriate.

A landlord may ask all prospective tenants, including disabled applicants, about whether:

- The applicant can meet tenancy requirements;
- The applicant abuses or is addicted to an illegal controlled substance;
- The applicant qualifies for a rental unit available only to people with a disability or a certain type of disability; or
- The applicant qualifies for a rental unit that is offered on a priority basis to people with a disability or with a certain type of disability.

Caution: A landlord may not exclude an applicant or tenant because of fear or speculation that a mentally ill person poses a danger. The landlord can assess, however, whether the individual is a direct threat by relying on trustworthy and objective information regarding current conduct or specific acts, such as threats or an assault on another tenant. The landlord must consider several factors, including the nature and severity of the risk of injury, the likelihood of injury, and whether a reasonable accommodation can eliminate the direct threat. The landlord must also consider whether the individual's receipt of treatment or medication has eliminated the direct threat. If after evaluating reliable and objective evidence the landlord can ascertain that the individual poses a direct threat, then the landlord may reject the individual.
Protection against housing discrimination

The FHA ensures that individuals and families have the right to seek and secure the housing of their choice. It makes it illegal to discriminate against a person in the sale or rental of housing because of race, color, religion, sex, familial status, national origin, or disability. Therefore, realtors, landlords, and bankers cannot treat people with disabilities differently than anyone else.

A landlord may ask questions pertaining to a person’s disability under only two circumstances:

▪ If a potential tenant is applying for housing specifically for people with disabilities, a landlord may ask if he/she qualifies for such a unit, and

▪ If a potential tenant is requesting a reasonable accommodation to modify a rule, policy or practice based on disability, a landlord may request verification of his/her need for the requested accommodation.

For housing related legal situations, you may wish to contact the U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). HUD serves people in need of rental, home buying and homeowner assistance, as well as those interested in housing rights. HUD programs are targeted towards a variety of audiences including families, the elderly and persons with disabilities. The links listed below can help clarify some of the federal, state and local laws and programs that affect your housing rights when searching for housing that meets your needs.

Renters can be at a significant risk of displacement as a result of foreclosure too. Families often have no idea that their landlord has fallen behind on the mortgage and they may continue to pay rent, only to learn at the last minute that they must move immediately because of a pending foreclosure action filed against the owner of their building.

Note: If you feel your rights have been violated, you should file a complaint with HUD’s office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity.

Finding accessible apartments

If you have a disability, searching for an apartment can be a challenge as you might need an apartment with special features. Accessible features generally include modifications to an apartment that allow for greater and easier mobility. Common examples of accessible features include wider doorways, lower electrical outlets to accommodate persons using wheelchairs and/or grab bars by the toilet and shower in the bathroom to enable easier maneuvering.

Limit your search for accessible apartments by selecting "Disability Access" on each site. You may need to perform an advanced search.

Note: The Fair Housing Act protects apartment hunters with disabilities, so it's important to become familiar with your rights before you begin to look for an apartment.

Making modifications when renting

If reasonable, disabled tenants may modify a rental unit to make it safe and comfortable. If the modification will create an inappropriate living condition for the next tenant, the landlord may agree to the modification upon the condition that the tenant restore the unit to its original condition prior to leaving.

All modifications are subject to approval from the landlord. The landlord may ask for a description of the proposed modification and any necessary building permits. Common modifications include wheelchair ramps, lowered countertops and special door handles.

A housing provider must allow a tenant with a disability to make changes to the physical structure of the premises that, 1) are reasonable and 2) give a tenant with disabilities equal access and full enjoyment of the residence. These could include:

- Installing grab bars.
- Replacing doorknobs with lever handles.
- Widening doorways for wheelchair access.
- Installing an entrance ramp to the building.

New construction of dwellings of four or more units must include wheelchair accessibility through entry ways and bathrooms, reinforced walls for grab bars in the bathroom and accessible electrical outlets and thermostats.

WARNING: The FHA makes it illegal for landlords to refuse to let tenants make reasonable modifications to a house or apartment if the tenant is willing to pay for the changes. The tenant will probably have to restore the apartment or house back to its original state when leaving if the landlord wants it restored. However, added accessibility features often make the unit marketable to more populations and a landlord might be willing to share the cost or take the cost off the rent due.
Rental assistance

Section 8 - housing choice voucher program

Section 8 is a type of subsidized housing that provides a rental subsidy so that an individual can lease a unit on the private market but for a set percentage of his/her income. The rental assistance is issued in the form of a voucher to someone seeking housing. The individual has the flexibility to use the voucher for rentals in the private market that meet their affordability limit. The voucher holder, or household, is required to pay between 30-40% of adjusted gross income for rent, which is the Total Tenant Payment (TTP). The administrator, which is usually a local housing authority, pays the difference between the TTP and the gross rent amount.

Since 1997 HUD has issued a limited number of housing choice vouchers targeted to people living with disabilities. Income-qualified, disabled individuals whose names appear on the waiting lists of one of the many housing authorities that received these vouchers in the past will be eligible to access one of these vouchers in the future as they turn over.

Advantages of housing choice voucher rental assistance:
- Choice of location and type of housing preferred,
- Ability to move from one apartment to another without losing rental assistance,
- Increased privacy. Housing assistance is not public information,
- Opportunity to live fully integrated in the community.

Disadvantages of housing choice voucher rental assistance:
- Demand is high. Section 8 wait lists can be very long or closed,
- The renter must find a landlord who will accept a Section 8 voucher and many properties choose not to accept the voucher.

Note: You will need to apply at a housing authority to obtain a voucher. The housing authority will help identify an eligible rent amount called a Fair Market Rent (FMR). You will be told the maximum rent and the maximum number of bedrooms the voucher allows. A credit, rental and criminal background check will probably be required.

State-based rental assistance
At least thirty states offer rental assistance programs of their own; most of these programs operate similarly to the Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher Program – tenants must meet program qualifications, hold a lease, live in housing that meets federal housing quality standards and they must contribute in some way towards housing costs.

Subsidized Housing

Subsidized housing, also known as public housing, was established to provide decent and safe rental housing for eligible low-income families, the elderly and persons with disabilities. Usually residents of subsidized housing pay about 30% of their income toward the rent. Public housing comes in all sizes and types, from scattered single-family houses to high-rise apartments. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) administers federal aid to local housing agencies (HAs) that manage the housing. The local HA determines eligibility based on: 1) annual gross income; 2) whether you qualify as elderly, a person with a disability or as a family; and 3) U.S. citizenship or eligible immigration status.

Area Median Income (AMI)

A family’s income must be below certain income limits to be eligible for subsidized housing. These income limits are established by HUD and are connected to the average household income in that area, which is defined as Area Median Income (AMI).

Some developments only accept households with earnings under 30% of the AMI; others accept household incomes that are under 50%-80% of the AMI. Additional eligibility requirements for subsidized housing may include proof of citizenship, tenancy references, criminal background checks and/or age requirements.

Questions to consider when seeking subsidized housing

- Do I meet my state or local area's eligibility criteria for subsidized housing?
- Which type of vouchers do I qualify for?
- Do I have a preference for tenant-based housing versus project-based housing?
- How flexible can I be with the type of building, unit type or community?
- What is the average wait time for each housing type I am considering?
- Am I in a position to wait for subsidized housing to come through?
- Can I afford to go into market-rate housing or remain where I am, until the subsidy comes through?
Do I have special circumstances that may advance me on the waiting list based on my local housing authority criteria?

Do I need assistance in completing and submitting housing applications?

Finding subsidized housing

There are two common types of apartment units that accept subsidies: public housing developments and private buildings developed with state or federal funding.

Public housing

These housing developments are run by housing authorities. There are studio and one-bedroom units for those who are elderly or disabled and units with 2-3 bedrooms for families. Each local housing authority will have a list of buildings, units and potential wait lists. Placing yourself on multiple housing authority lists and being flexible will greatly improve your chances of finding an apartment in a shorter time frame.

Some states have a universal application for public housing authorities and others have specific forms for each housing authority. Whether using a universal application or separate ones, each housing authority screens tenants separately and maintains its own wait lists.

Resources for finding private subsidized housing:

These are apartment developments that have been subsidized by the federal or state government but are owned and operated by a private developer or management company. They have affordable rents and often accessible units. Several different state and federal funding sources are used to build this housing such as low-income tax credits and special needs trust funds. Each funder maintains a list of the affordable units.

You apply directly to the private development for this subsidized housing. Each development has a separate application form and keeps its own wait list. If there are no apartments available when you apply, be sure to put your name on any open waitlist. Sometimes the wait is short and sometimes it can take several years. However, you must be on the list to receive subsidized housing.

Section 8 - project-based voucher

A Section 8 – project-based voucher usually involves specific units in a building and is subsidized through a contract between the owner and a local public housing authority. A renter pays 30% of his/her adjusted gross income as rent and the remainder of the rent is subsidized. The resident has the rental assistance as long as he or she lives in the building and remains income eligible. Project-based housing is usually owned and managed by private parties, either for-profit or non-profit. Public Housing Authorities (PHAs) refer families who have applied for housing choice vouchers and are on the PHA’s waiting list to rent these properties when units become vacant.

Section 811 supportive housing

This program helps to expand rental housing for persons with disabilities. Funded by HUD and administered by a nonprofit agency, the goal of the program is to allow persons with disabilities to live as independently as possible in the community by increasing the supply of rental housing with access to support services.
Eligible residents must have a very low income, considerably below the median income of the area and pay 30% of their adjusted gross income toward the rent. At least one member of the household must be at least 18 years old and have a disability.

Protections for people with disabilities

The Fair Housing Act protects people from discrimination when they are renting, buying or securing financing for any housing. The prohibitions specifically cover discrimination because of race, color, national origin, religion, sex, disability and the presence of children.

In any federally funded project under HUD’s Section 504 housing regulations, accessible housing units must be comparable to units for persons without disabilities in terms of overall size and location.

The Uniform Federal Accessibility Standards (UFAS) are the accessibility standards that have been adopted by various federal agencies, including HUD, and are applicable to federally-funded facilities. These standards for facility accessibility by persons with disabilities are to be applied during the design, construction and alteration of buildings and facilities.
Note: The Department of Justice (DOJ) and the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) are jointly responsible for enforcing the federal Fair Housing Act (FHA), which prohibits discrimination in housing on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, familial status and disability.

Assisted Living

Assisted living facilities are licensed residential facilities providing housing with services. The term "assisted living" is the most commonly used term for these facilities although they can also be referred to as adult residential care, personal care homes, adult congregate care or community-based retirement facilities. While there is a common nationwide definition of assisted living, each state regulates and monitors this type of housing through its own laws and regulations leading to considerable variation among states in terms of the types of housing and services provided.

Eligibility

Since each state regulates and monitors assisted living based on its own laws and regulations, eligibility requirements can vary considerably from state to state. Eligibility can also vary from facility to facility. Specific eligibility criteria can include age (some programs only admit those over 55), ability to transfer independently and/or maximum level of assistance required for activities of daily living. Activities of Daily Living (ADLs) include walking, feeding, dressing, grooming, toileting, transferring and bathing. Discharge criteria will vary and should be carefully reviewed at the time of admission.

Note: Assisted living does not generally provide ongoing, 24-hour skilled nursing care. However, some providers do offer skilled care on an intermittent basis.

What it provides

Some of the services provided, coordinated and/or arranged for by an assisted living community might include but are not limited to:

- 24-hour awake staff to provide oversight and meet scheduled and unscheduled needs
- Provision and oversight of personal and supportive services (assistance with activities of daily living and instrumental activities of daily living)
- Health-related services (e.g., medication management services)
- Social services
- Recreational activities
- Meals
- Housekeeping and laundry
- Transportation
Assessing the cost

The cost of assisted living varies across the country with the average being about $2,500-$3,500/month. The cost of living in a particular area, on-site amenities and the extent of services provided will determine the exact monthly cost. In addition, the base monthly rent will depend on whether accommodations are semi-private or private rooms, suites sharing bathrooms, studios with or without kitchens, one or two bedrooms, etc. Assisted living is estimated to be about 60% of the cost of nursing home care.

When assessing the cost of assisted living it is important to identify what personal assistance a prospective resident will need on an on-going basis. Many assisted living facilities assess an initial base fee that provides a baseline level of services and then offer the option to add on “al a carte” services as needed. Other facilities establish levels of care with a corresponding fee schedule. Care provided to someone paying the base rent might be limited to 30 minutes per day. Levels of care might be defined as minimal, moderate, or maximal, or as care assist or care enhanced, depending on the number of ADLs (such as bathing, grooming, dressing, and medication monitoring) for which a resident needs assistance. It is important to understand that this assigned level of care comes with fee increments of $300-$400 for each level and can add up considerably toward monthly costs.

Caution: As MS progresses, assisted living may not be able to meet all the care needs of an individual. Discuss the maximal level of services you can receive as well as exit options if needs eventually exceed what can be provided.

Financial options

Private pay
The majority of residents of assisted living pay privately for this type of housing with services. Many people with MS consider this option unaffordable. However, this may or may not be true. If living in one’s own home but considering assisted living, it is important to do a complete comparison of budget items necessary for each option:

Assets — If one is able to sell his/her home, this would provide a sizeable amount of money to support the initial entry and monthly fees for services. In the same way, if one has retirement accounts and/or assets, this would ease the financial burden considerably.
Income — Most potential assisted living residents have income coming in, whether from employment, disability benefits or a pension. These dollars need to be factored in when thinking about meeting assisted living monthly costs.

Comparison of monthly budgeted costs — The significant monthly cost of assisted living is a bundled rate that encompasses housing-related expenses such as rent/mortgage, property taxes, meals, utilities, house insurance, house maintenance and landscaping, as well as personal assistance costs. Therefore, when comparing the cost for living at home or in an apartment with an assisted living option, it is important to look at all of these costs. To make an appropriate comparison, make a list of all the monthly costs paid currently as a homeowner or renter, including meals and personal care services, add everything together and then compare with the assisted living’s monthly rate.

Affordable assisted living — Many states have identified the need to create more affordable assisted living for people with moderate to low incomes. States have begun to provide affordable housing financing for developers to assist in creating more affordable units. The goal is to make assisted living easier to access for prospective residents who do not have enough income to afford the market rate. The need for affordable assisted living is great; typically wait lists maintained by assisted living operators are long, so it makes sense to apply well in advance.

National Adult Day Services Association (NADSA)

The National Adult Day Services Association (NADSA) Adult day services centers are a key provider of long-term care services in the United States. They provide a program of activities, health monitoring, socialization and assistance with daily activities which allows individuals to continue to live in their homes and receive needed care in a supportive, professionally staffed, community-based setting. Adult day services benefit family caregivers by enabling them to remain in the workforce or receive needed respite and by providing them with direct services (e.g., educational programs, support groups). They provide cost-effective care, while supporting individual autonomy, allowing individuals to “age in place,” and enhancing the quality of life for both participants and family caregivers.

Adult foster care

The adult foster care model, sometimes referred to as adult family homes or domiciliary care homes, provides residential placement in a private residence where the homeowner receives payment from Medicaid to provide room, board and personal care to persons who are elderly or who have disabilities. Adult foster homes provide supervision, oversight and personal care and are licensed by the state. Most states limit the number of individuals who may be served in this setting to five or fewer residents. Often these homes are unable to serve individuals who need assistance with administration of medications or who have significant behavioral issues.

Group homes

Group Homes provide care within an intimate setting, usually up to four people, with a live-in resident manager. They are privately run and can provide individual or shared rooms. They may provide a variety of services including meals, housekeeping, bathing, dressing, grooming, management of medications and medical needs, and safety supervision. Group homes are licensed, based on the services offered. Medicaid often covers residents who qualify for the waiver.

Caution: Some states may not license or inspect adult foster care homes. Contact your state or county Department of Health for background information/complaints before you select one.

Board-and-care homes

Board-and-care homes are a special type of assisted living community and are usually for those who want or need to be in a group living situation. These are licensed facilities that provide room, board, 24-hour staffing, and assistance with personal care and daily living activities, such as bathing, dressing and medication management. Nursing and medical care are not provided on site.

Board-and-care homes can be a converted single-family home in residential neighborhoods or a large building similar to an apartment building with over 100 residents. Residents may share bathrooms, bedrooms and living spaces. A characteristic feature of Board-and-care homes is personal, family-style care with communal meals and there is daily contact with staff. The cost is often lower than other facilities.

Note: Medicare does not cover this type of care. Medicaid 1915c waivers can be used in most states to pay for services. SSI may also be used for payments.

Caution: If you are considering a board-and-care facility, licensure should be verified with a county or state licensing office.

Home-sharing

Home-sharing is an option in which two or more unrelated individuals share a house or apartment. Each usually has his/her own bedroom, share the kitchen and other living space and sometimes a bathroom. Variations of this option can include renting rooms or sharing the home with someone in exchange for assistance with cooking, cleaning and other chores.

A home sharer might be a senior citizen, a person with disabilities, a working professional, someone at-risk of homelessness, a single parent or simply a person wishing to share his or her life and home with others. For these people, shared housing offers companionship, affordable housing, security, mutual support and more.
Some larger homes are sponsored by faith-based or community groups. This type of housing typically costs less than other rental options. Many programs have staff who are trained to carefully screen each program applicant through interviewing, background checking and personal references.

Note: When looking for a home-share be sure to practice due diligence by using reputable organizations to help you search.

Resources for home sharing:

Note: Please know that National Shared Housing Resource Center (NSHRC) is not a one-on-one matching program and does not interview clients for home sharing.

Skilled Nursing Facilities (SNFs) for people living with MS

The National MS Society can provide information and resources about living with advanced MS. In-home and long-term care

Most in-home care is not medical care, but rather help with basic personal tasks of everyday life, sometimes called activities of daily living. Care is often provided in the home by informal caregivers such as family or friends and do not require a skilled background and typically do not receive compensation. Sometimes paid providers may be brought in to help. A long-term care facility can provide rehabilitative, restorative, and/or ongoing skilled nursing care to patients or residents in need of assistance with activities of daily living. They can include nursing homes, rehabilitation facilities, inpatient behavioral health facilities and long-term chronic care hospitals.

Sharing Your Story

Do you find there is a shortage of affordable accessible housing options in your area? Are you on lengthy waiting lists for subsidized housing? Are you unable to visit others with disabilities in their own home? Have you found it difficult to remain in your residence due to the cost of modifying your home or maintaining a residence on a fixed income? Are you in jeopardy of losing your home or apartment? Do you have family members, children or pets that will be impacted by the loss of your housing?

People living with multiple sclerosis sometimes find it necessary for them to modify their homes to increase accessibility and improve safety. Modifying a home may also allow a person with MS to maintain a connection to a job, remain an active member of the community, or even to remain independent. However, these modifications can be prohibitively expensive. People with MS may benefit from financial relief through tax credits, grants or assistance programs.

In states across the country, MS activists have recruited legislators to introduce home modification legislation, formed coalitions and built momentum. Several states have already enacted these laws, and many others are considering bills.

Contact the Society’s advocacy staff or visit the website to learn more about key initiatives and coalition efforts focused on housing. Submit your story in writing to the Government Relations Committee. Attend community meetings that relate to housing in your area and keep the chapter informed. Sign up to be an activist with the MS Action Alert Network and receive calls to action and updates on housing and other issues of interest to you.
